Breast care for women

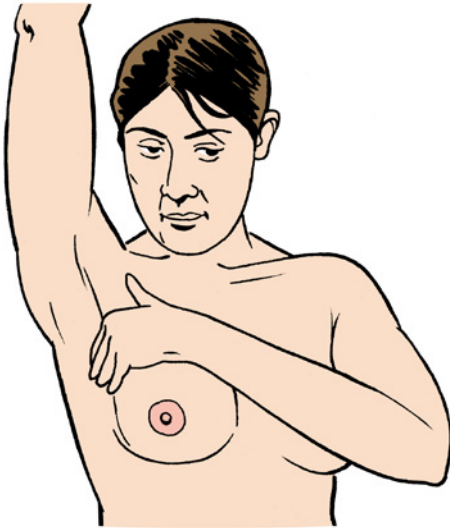

About this easy read booklet

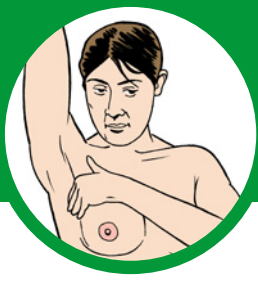

This booklet is about breast care for women.

You can learn about checking your breasts and screenings for breast cancer.

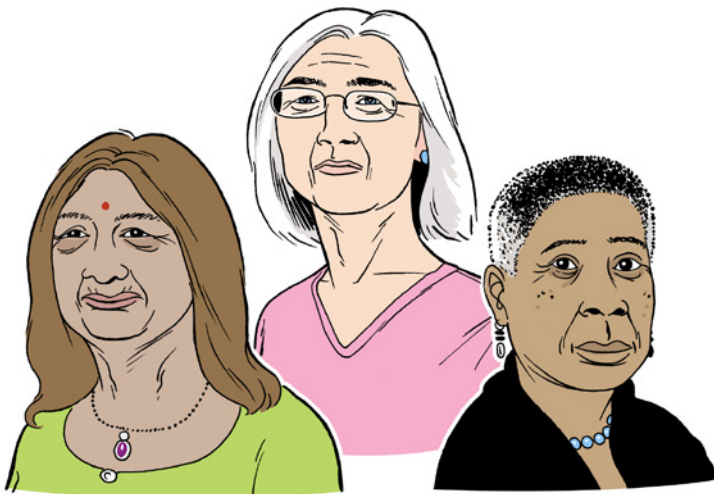

If you are worried about your health, you should talk to a doctor or nurse.

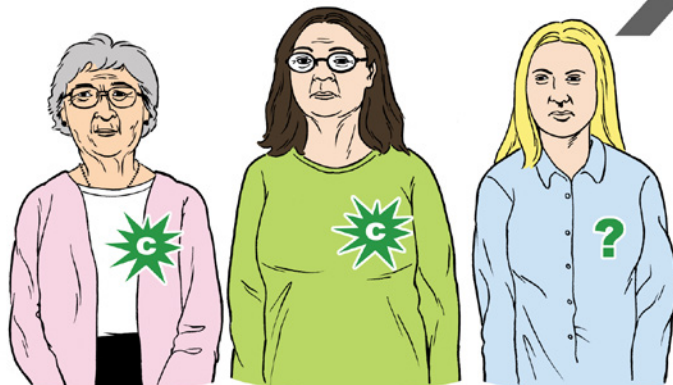

Breast care for women

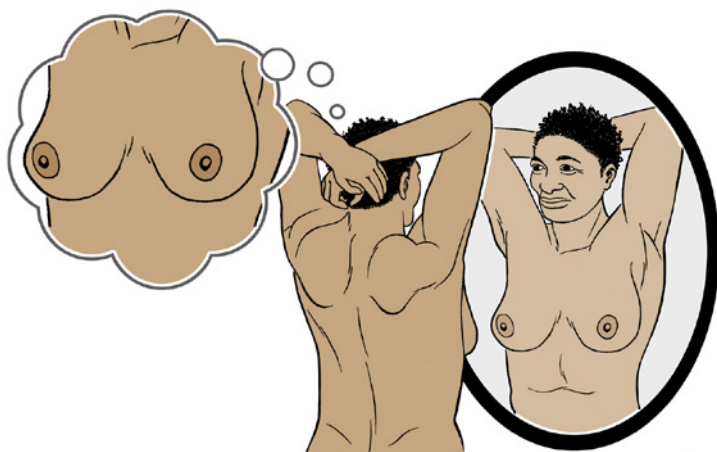

The most common cancer for women is breast cancer.

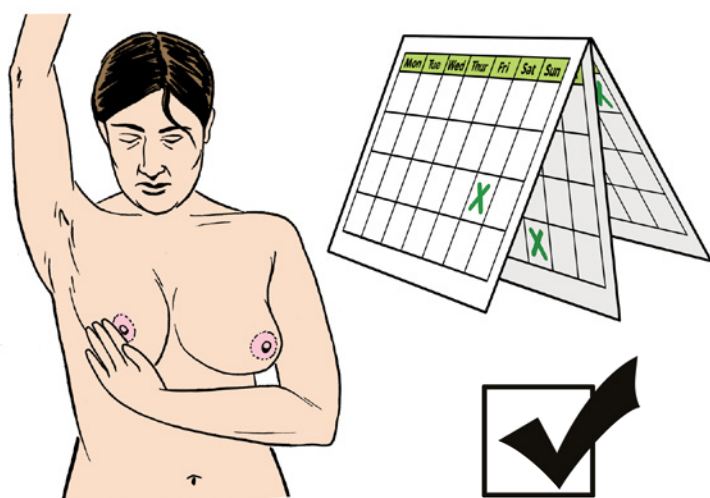

Women of any age can get breast cancer but the risk is higher when you are over 50.

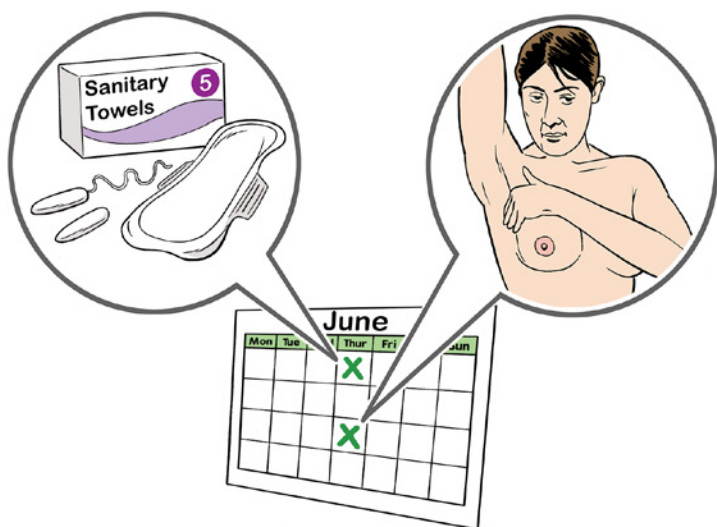

If your mother, aunt or sister has had breast cancer, you may be more likely to get it.

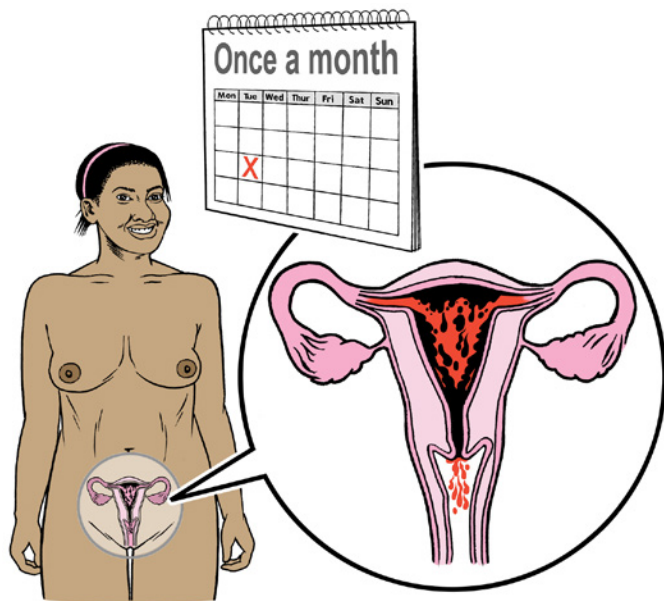

Cancer is easier to treat if you find it early. You should check your breasts for any changes.

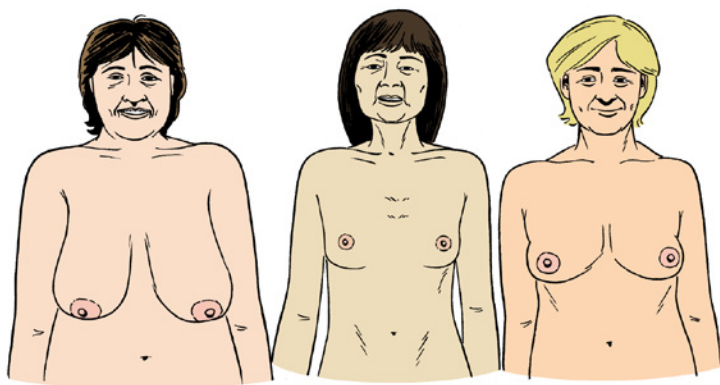

It is very important to check what your breasts feel like at different times of the month.

This is because the menstrual cycle causes changes in the breasts. It can make them bigger or more sensitive.

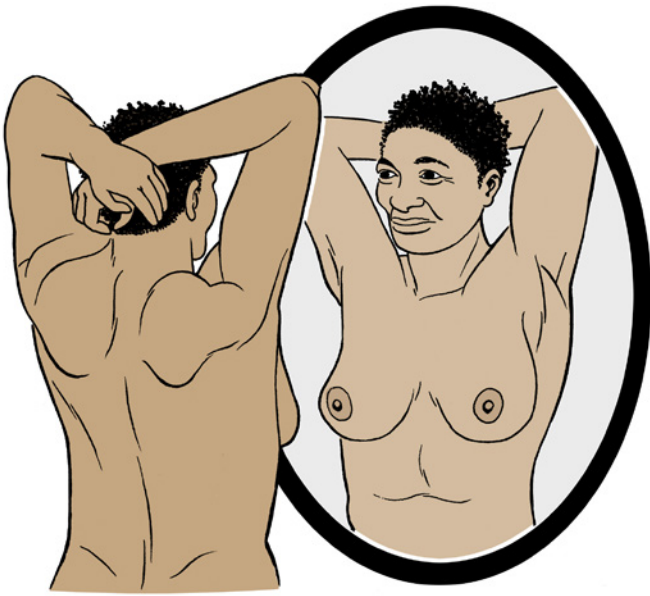

The menstrual cycle is the time from the first day of a woman's period to the day before her next period.

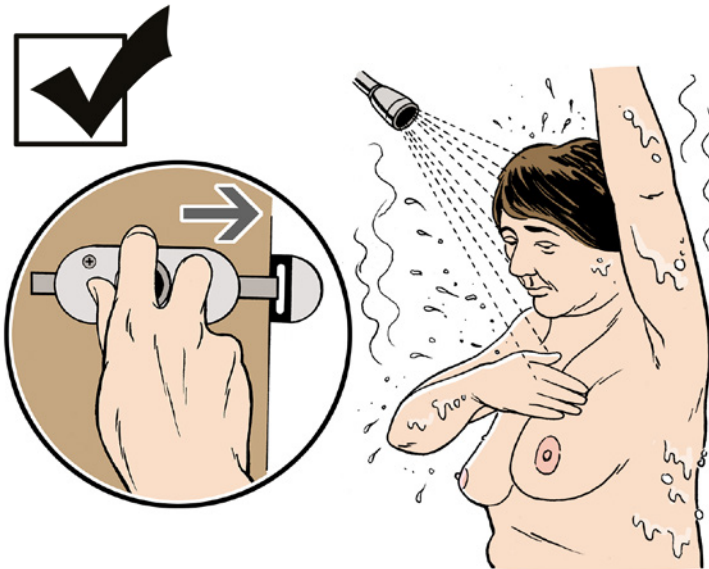

Every woman's body is different. You should know what your breasts look and feel like normally. Then you will be able to spot any changes or lumps.

Some women have one breast larger than the other. This is OK.

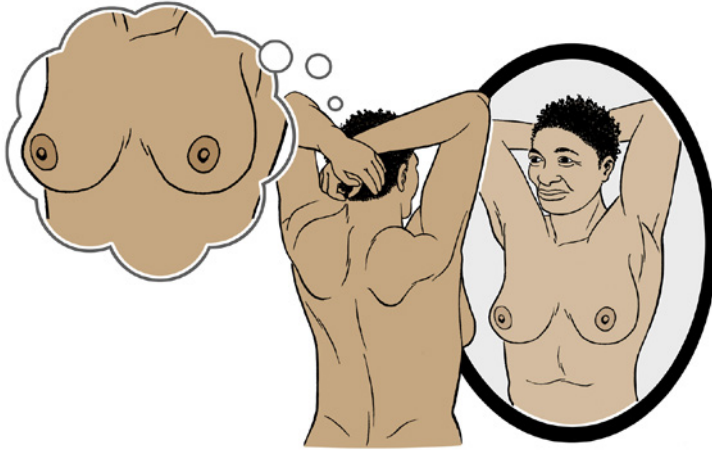

Check for any changes you can see by looking at your breasts in a mirror.

Check your breasts for changes you can feel when you are somewhere private. This could be easier in the shower or bath.

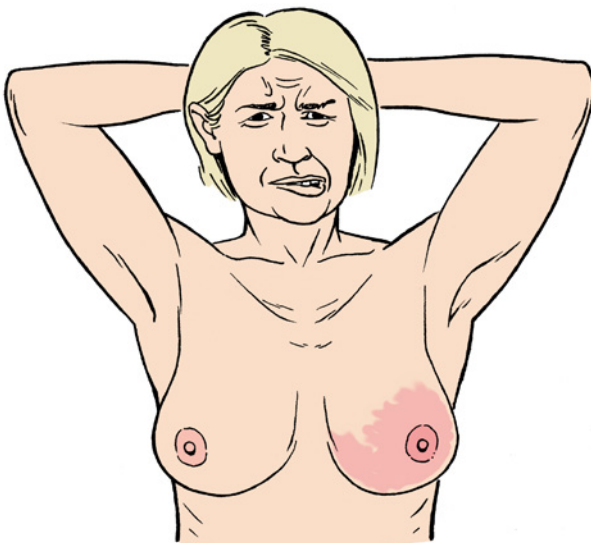

Changes to look for

Changes in the shape of your breasts or nipples.

Lumps in your breasts or underarms.

Changes to the skin on your breasts.

Any liquid coming out of your nipples.

How to check your breasts

Feel all over the breast.

Then feel around the nipple area.

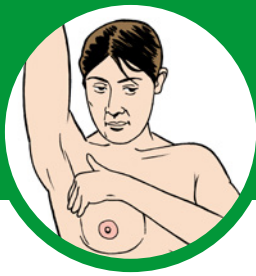

Then feel under your arms.

If you find any changes or lumps in your breasts or your underarms, it is very important to see your doctor as soon as you can.

You can ask to see a female doctor if you would like.

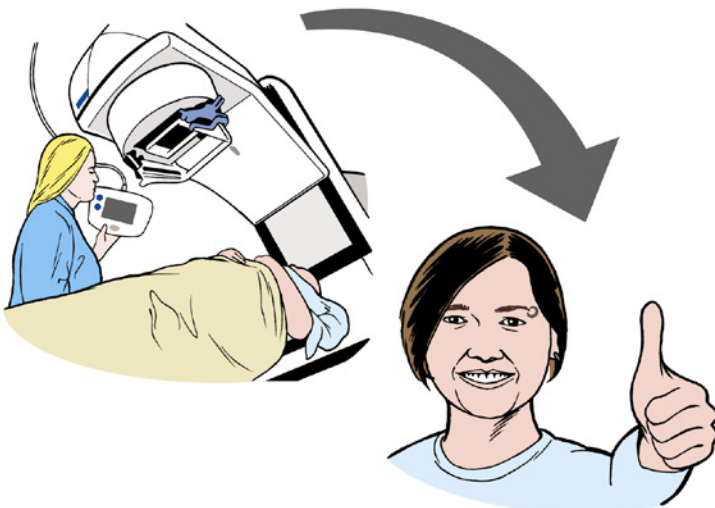

Breast screening

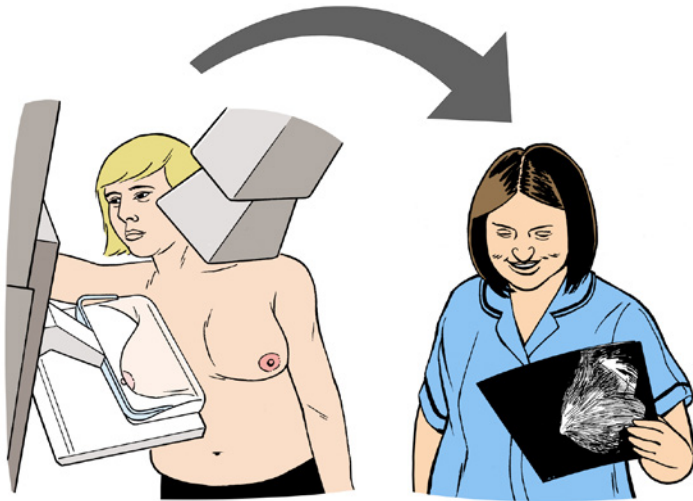

If you are aged 50 to 70 you will get a letter inviting you for breast screening. This will happen every 3 years. In some parts of England, women are invited from the age of 47 to 73.

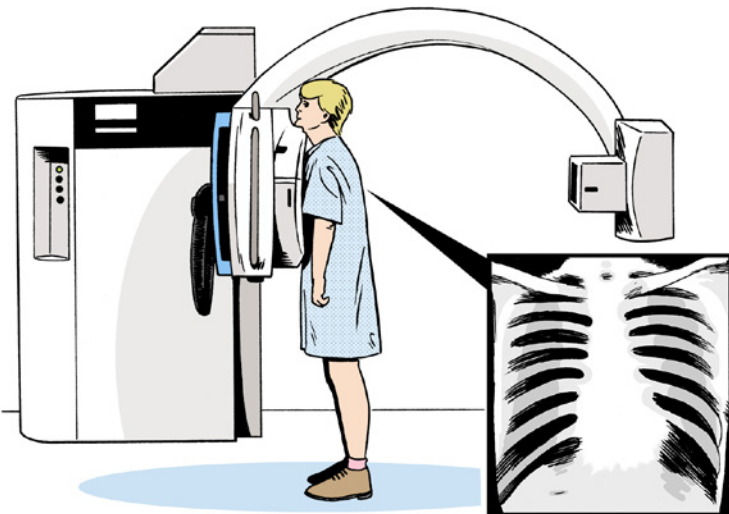

Screenings are tests that look for very early signs of cancer. You have a screening even if you feel well.

It means cancer can be treated or stopped before it causes problems.

Breast screening means having two x-rays of each breast. These are called mammograms.

An x-ray is a picture of the inside of your body.

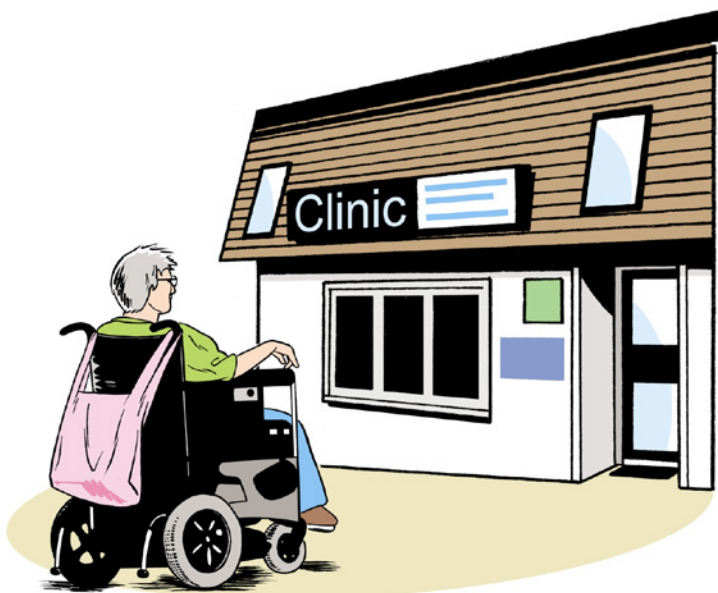

The mammograms will show if your breasts are healthy or if there are any signs of cancer.

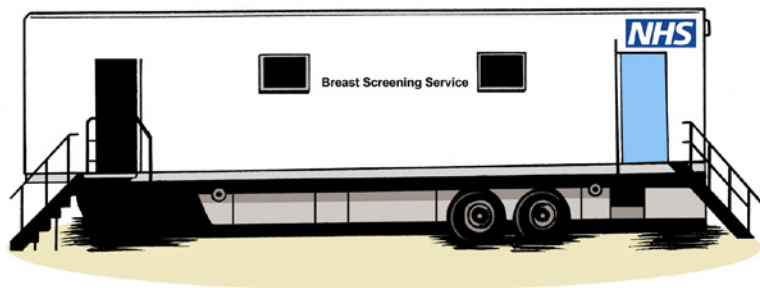

You might have a mammogram at a:

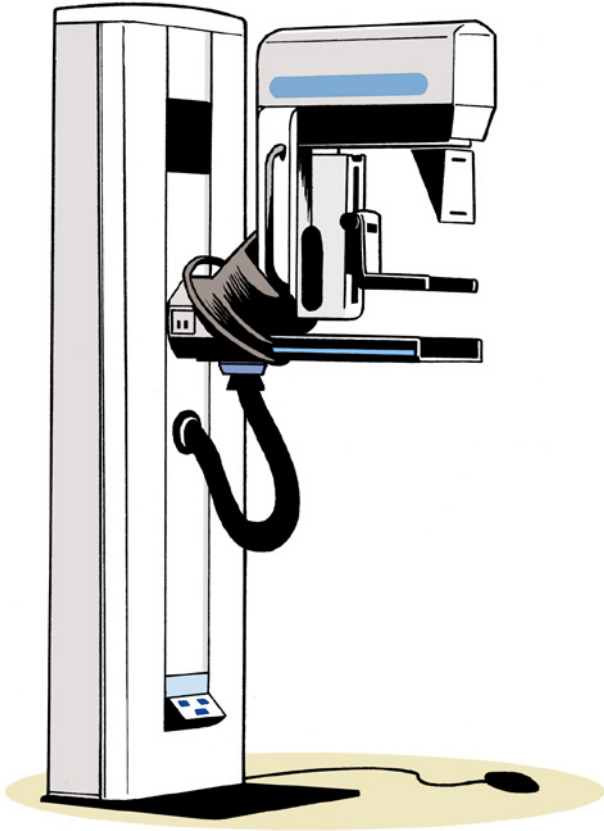

- hospital

- clinic

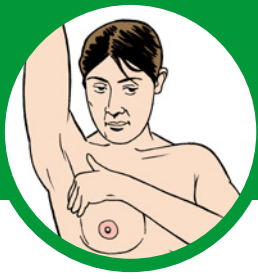

- mobile unit

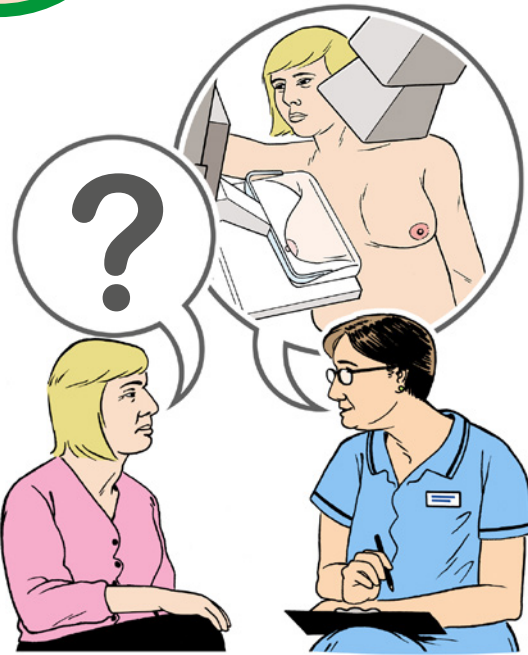

This is what a breast screening machine looks like. This takes the x-ray of your breasts.

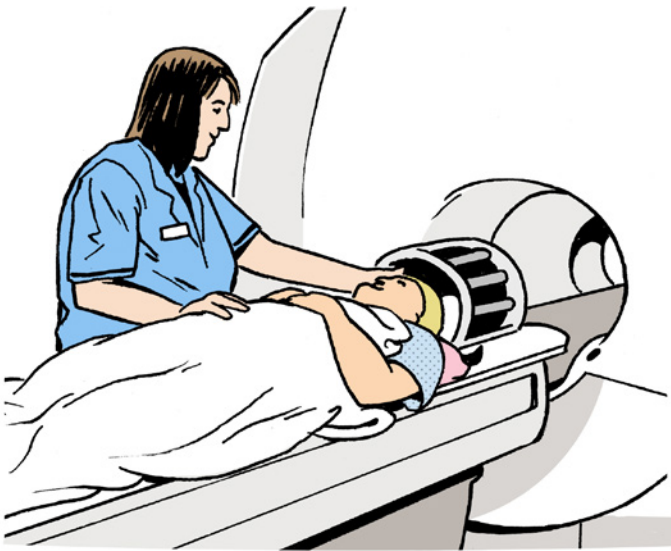

It will always be a woman doing the screening.

What happens

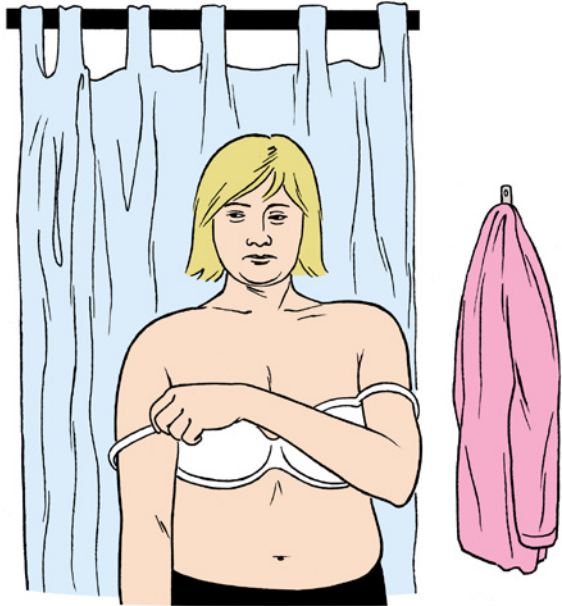

When you arrive at the breast screening unit, the radiographer will tell you what a mammogram is. You can ask them questions.

A radiographer is a person who takes scans and x-rays of your body.

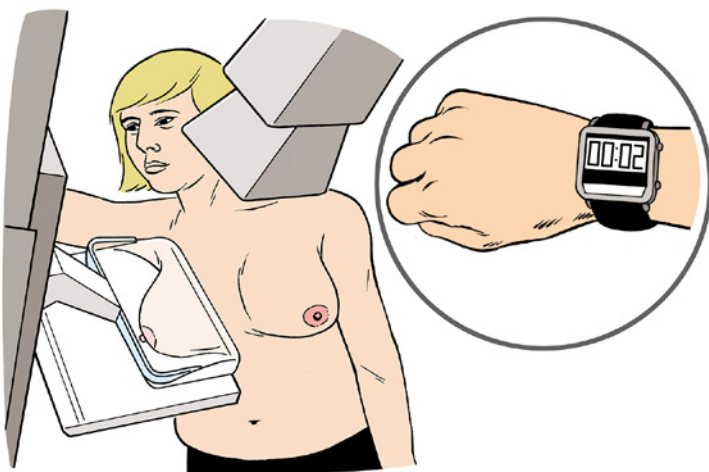

The radiographer will check your name, address and date of birth.

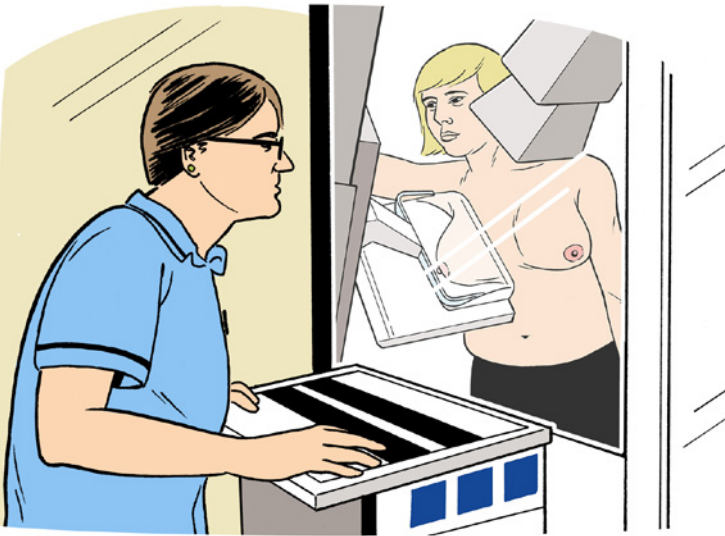

You will be asked to take your top and bra off.

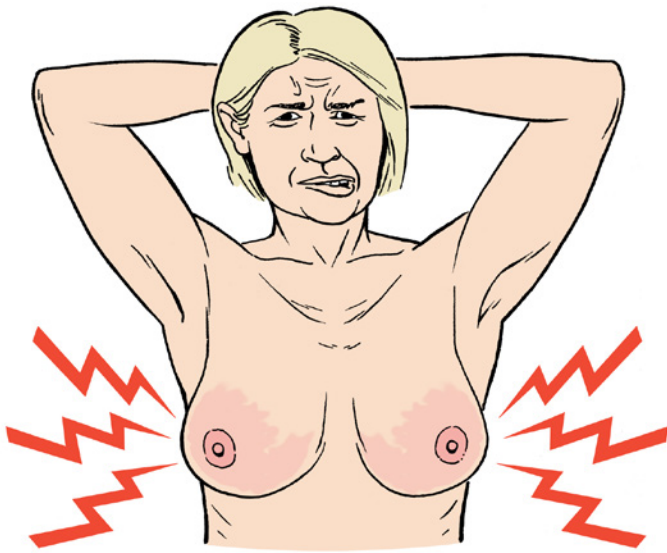

The radiographer will put your breast between two flat plates on the machine. The plates will press against your breast to take the x-rays. The radiographer will do one breast at a time.

It only takes a few minutes.

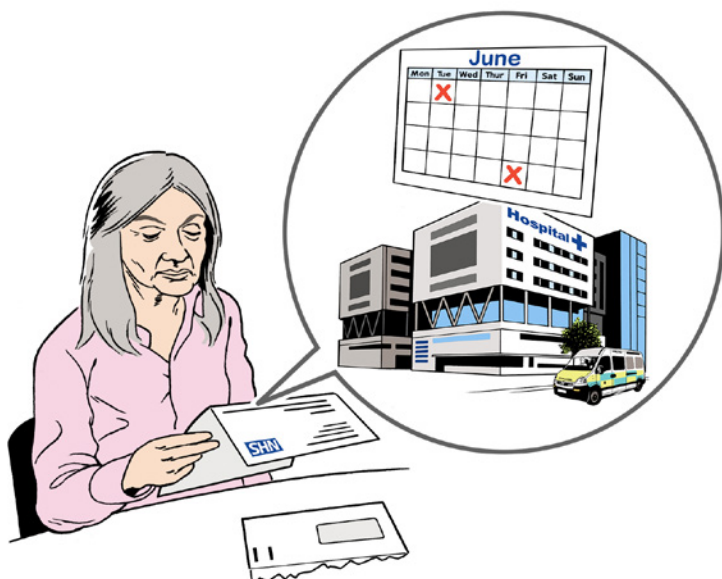

The radiographer will go behind a glass screen when the x-rays are being taken.

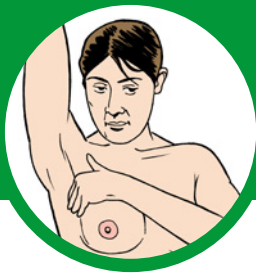

Some women find it painful or uncomfortable. This should not last long.

After you can ask the radiographer how you will find out your results and when this will be.

Sometimes you may be asked to come back for another mammogram because the results are not clear. This does not always mean something is wrong.
